G/TBT/N/GBR/14	07/06/06	United Kingdom - Spring Water and Bottled Drinking Water These draft UK Regulations consolidate the requirements laid down in the existing Regulations, which implement Directives 80/777/EEC (as amended) and 98/83/EC (as amended), the latter as it relates to bottled water for human consumption. Schedule 8, Part 1 (1d), of these draft Regulations contains a national requirement that spring water and bottled drinking water which has been softened or desalinated must not have its hardness reduced below a certain level. In these draft Regulations the level is measured as 60 mg/litre of the calcium ion (the main component of water hardness). This is a national provision to be implemented throughout the UK and applies to all softened/desalinated spring waters and bottled drinking waters sold in the UK. It does not apply to untreated waters or to natural mineral waters. The minimum hardness requirement laid down in the Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland Regulations is identical to that laid down in the English Regulations. This provision is currently subject to technical notification to the European Commission under 98/34/EC.
